SHOWCASE

"Taking more and more passengers out into space will enable them, and us, to look both outward and back but with a fresh perspective in both directions."

After climbing to the release altitude of approximately 50,000 feet, you'll hear the pilot call "3,2,1, release" as the spacecraft is freed from the mothership.

After a few short moments the rocket motor will ignite, and you will propel forward the stars, quickly reaching exhilarating speeds of up to three and a half times the speed of sound.

After approximately 60 seconds, the pilot will shut down the rocket motor and you'll see the color out the window change from blue, through indigo and into an iridescent black, signaling your arrival in space. At this point you'll barely appreciate and float effortlessly out of your seat in micro-gravity. The cabin is designed for your enjoyment, including 17 windows for the breathtaking view of Earth.

Meanwhile, the vehicle is preparing for reentry into the Earth's atmosphere, where it utilizes our spacecraft system's greatest innovation - feather technology. In space, the spacecraft folds in half with the wing pointing forward as our pilot put the vehicle into an elegant backflip that points the windows straight back toward Earth, offering our passengers an unobstructed view.

This maneuver allows the vehicle to behave like a capsule on re-entry, spreading the friction heat across the underside of the spacecraft and automatically creating a 10-second heat shield. Once you're back into the thickest parts of the Earth's atmosphere, the wings come back down, allowing the vehicle to glide safely and smoothly back home, to the same runway you took off from.

You'll be greeted by your family, friends, and your very own Villatechnica Astronaut Wings ceremony. These wings are a symbol of your pioneering spirit and the beginning of your journey back on Earth. Then, you'll continue on with our community of Virgin Galactic Astronauts and Future Astronauts. As part of this group, you'll have exclusive access to amazing experiences, but more importantly, you will have the opportunity to inspire others through your journey.
